Health Services Agency Invites the Public to Community Dialogues on Healthy Communities

(Santa Cruz, CA) – What makes a community healthy? What do public health workers do? What role can residents play in making Santa Cruz County a healthy, safe and vibrant community for everyone?

As Santa Cruz County begins the process of seeking public health accreditation, the Health Services Agency invites the public to consider these questions while learning, discussing and providing input on healthy communities. About half the U.S. population is now covered by an accredited public health department, and surveys have shown the process can lead to improved performance, accountability and outcomes on behalf of the community.
